Their unique itineraries, like our Gourmet Explorer Tours and smaller group formats, require a discounted, supplementary charge, which is why we make sure to only select the best. Please your palate and expand your culinary knowledge with each of our delectable Gourmet Explorer Tours.

WELLNESS TOURS

Transcend the moment as you expand your mind and strengthen your body with a Wellness Tour. Soak in a restorative, mineral-rich thermal spring in Rome or centre your chi with a taiji (tai chi) class on a beautiful and serene beach on Palma de Mallorca. Be refreshed by a Mediterranean breeze as you calm your mind and strengthen your focus through a yoga class overlooking the seaside town of Taormina. Restore and heal your mind, body and soul as you travel throughout Europe with our Wellness Tours.

"We find that people remember us, like the Maitre D' in La Veranda. They see hundreds of people from cruise to cruise, yet last night he came over to us and said, 'nice to see you again.' Moments like that make you feel really cared for."

Michael & Abigail M., Seven Seas Society' Gold Member

ART FOR LIFE

If you are an art lover, a visit to St. Petersburg may well inspire you to relocate permanently and spend the rest of your days wandering the Hermitage. One of the oldest and largest museums in the world, the Hermitage boasts a collection of more than three million works of art and artefacts, only part of which can be displayed in the complex of historic buildings that includes the Winter Palace, the former state residence of the Russian emperors. Some favourites include the 23 works by the Dutch master Rembrandt, Michelangelo's sculpture Crouching Boy, and two of Leonardo da Vinci's oil paintings.

AMBER ROOM

BY ANASTASIYA ILINA

During the time of its creation, at the start of the 18th century, the Amber Room was intended for the Charlottenburg Palace in Prussia and was ordered by King Friedrich. After his death, however, the heir was not too fond of the amber creation, and it was then transferred to Berlin for storage. It would have been forgotten if it weren't for Peter the Great who was visiting Prussia at the time and was intrigued by the amber room. He was keen to acquire it for St. Petersburg's first museum. In the end, there was no need to purchase it. In a diplomatic move, the Amber Room was gifted to Peter the Great. As it turned out though, the gift arrived in Russia missing a few pieces, and the room was never installed during the time of Peter the Great, remaining forgotten for a number of years.

The Amber Room project was once again revisited when Peter the Great's daughter, Elizabeth, came to power. She ordered the Amber Room to be installed in the Winter Palace, also known as the Hermitage. The remaining parts were replaced with amber-imitating artwork. Over time, the Amber Room was transferred to the Catherine Palace on the outskirts of St. Petersburg. The final changes to the Amber Room were made during the time of Catherine the Great. For over a century, the Amber Room was a beloved space for entertaining guests and holding meetings for the Romanovs. At the time, the Amber Room was often referred to as the eighth wonder of the world and was valued at US$500 million in modern terms.

The Second World War brought massive destruction upon St. Petersburg, then called Leningrad, and its environs. Palaces, such as Catherine Palace, were under constant threat of air raids and looting. Museum keepers attempted to hide artworks and valuables, but the Amber Room was too large to save. The Nazi army besieged the city, came very close to the borders of St. Petersburg, and took the Tsar's Village where the palace is located. During the looting, the Amber Room was dismantled and transported to Königsberg (modern Kaliningrad) never to be seen again. The current location of the Amber Room is unknown, although many theories have sprung up over the years based on findings of amber vases or other suspected pieces of the décor.

The Amber Room has now been completely reconstructed, based on the photographs left from pre-war times. After almost 20 years of hard work, the Amber Room was reopened to the public in 2003, yet the search for the original treasure still continues.

WITH YOU

— by Liesl Noel —

From Vikings to modern marvel, Stockholm is the capital of Sweden and considered the “Shopping Capital of the North.” While steeped in history, Stockholm has evolved into a sophisticated city, keeping within the understated Scandinavian elegance and sense of style with the typical understated functionality and harmony. Galleries, malls, cafes and markets make for a tantalising and exciting shopping experience. As a city that presents a wide array of stores to satisfy every shopper, there are true and unique Swedish items that visitors should not leave Stockholm without.

TRADITIONAL GIFTS

The Dala (Dalecarlien) Horse is perhaps the best-known of all the artifacts, and somewhat of a Swedish trademark. The wood carved, distinctly brick-red horse with hand-painted kurbits pattern is typical of Dalarna county, where the original copies were made in only one village, Nusnas. Other colours of the Dala horse have been approved, but they are not considered traditional. Newer varieties like the Dalecarlien horse inside a crystal cube, can be found at Sweden of Stockholm in Old Town, but the Nordic Museum Gift Shop, which only offers genuine Swedish quality items, is the best place to purchase this traditional favourite.

The indigenous people of Sweden, the Sámi have their own traditional craftsmanship called Duodji. These unique and practical handicrafts and jewellery are easily recognisable and, in case you’re not sure, Sámi-produced items are always marked with a symbol of authenticity. Colours are most often representative of the Sámi flag: dark blue, bright red, grass green and golden yellow. Sámi bracelets are made by braiding silver and pewter threads inside or atop a flat caribou leather string, fastened with a small bone-carved button. These culturally historical bracelets take hours to complete and are meant to last for life or until the leather needs changing. Practical items, such as water bowls carved out of birch, water flasks made of leather, knife sheaths or spoons carved from bone, small engraved boxes for sewing equipment are but a few of the typical crafts visitors will come across. Sámi crafts are created from natural materials, notably carving wood or (caribou) bone, and utilising hand processed leather. Considering their exclusivity and the hours of hard work that go into these unique products, they are priced accordingly. The artists usually prefer selling their handicrafts in person, and are therefore only sold in a handful of stores in Stockholm.

Antoni Gaudí left his mark on Barcelona with unrivalled passion and imagination, which is why his renowned masterpieces have been deemed by UNESCO as World Heritage Sites. You cannot miss La Sagrada Família (Church of the Holy Family), as it is an icon of the city with its spindle-shaped towers dominating the skyline. At the centre of the city is another famous Gaudí monument, Casa Batlló. Even from the outside you can appreciate its uniqueness — its facade is made of stone and glass and its external walls are wavy and covered with a mosaic of fragments.

A Brief History of PORTUGAL'S

BEAUTIFUL AZULEJO TILES

BY NINA SANTOS

Azulejos date as far back as the 13th century, when the Moors invaded the land that now belongs to Spain and Portugal, but they secured their foothold in Portuguese culture between the 16th and 17th centuries. The word azulejo stems from Arabic roots, meaning 'small polished stone'. Originally, they were fairly simple structures cut into geometric shapes in neutral tones.

It wasn't until Portugal's King Manuel I visited Seville and brought the idea back, that Portugal truly adopted this artwork into its culture. The tiles were used to cover up the large areas of blank wall that were common inside buildings during the Gothic period.

Antique azulejos were decorated in a simple colour palate, dominated by blues and whites. It is believed that these colours were influenced by the Age of Discoveries (15th-18th centuries) and considered fashionable at the time. The other colours that appeared were yellow (sometimes looking gold) and green.

After their introduction by King Manuel I, simple geometric shapes were replaced by more ornate decoration. It was (and still is) typical for the Portuguese to tell stories about their history, religion, and culture through this decorative means; they soon became pieces of public artwork.

While visiting a church or cathedral in Portugal, visitors should pay as much attention to the alters as the interior and exterior walls. Many are decorated in azulejos instead of fabric, depicting a style that started during the 16th century. Birds and leaves were frequent symbols used as decoration, possibly inspired by Asian fabrics.

After the Earthquake of 1755 (which destroyed most of Lisbon), the capital saw a shift from Manueline architecture (a Portuguese-Gothic style) to Pombaline styles, also influencing the use of azulejos.

During the last couple of centuries, the use of azulejos exploded. Today, it is common to see them decorating churches, monasteries, restaurants, bars, railway and subway stations, palaces, and regular homes. They are also used extensively in interior decoration.

Azulejos are a dominant feature in every Portuguese city and can be seen in the villages as well. In addition to public buildings and private homes, they are used as street signs, to decorate public benches, and beach walls.

Some of the most famous sites known for their azulejo art include the Sao Bento Railway Station in Porto, the Buçaco Palace, and many stops in the Lisbon Metro.
